Despite the bevy of rumors swirling in 2006, The reason Morgan left Southampton is not as straightforward, than John's exit; he was simply too busy to continue and so he left Southampton to continue his career at Arsenal. This was a surprise to many, as he was seen as a promising young player. However, he was not the only player to leave Southampton in 2006. Other players like Scott Carson and Paul Robinson also left the club. The 2006-07 season was a challenging one for Southampton, as they finished in 17th place in the Premier League. This was a significant drop from their previous season, where they finished in 10th place. The club's performance was largely due to a lack of goals, as they only scored 15 goals in all competitions. This was a significant improvement on their previous season, where they only scored 10 goals. However, it was still not enough to keep them in the Premier League. The club's manager, Nigel Adkins, was sacked at the end of the season. This was a significant blow to the club, as Adkins was seen as a promising young manager. The club's performance in 2006-07 was a significant setback for Southampton, as they were relegated to the Championship.
