We wish to note that once you have verified your mobile number with us, 73,6% of our population is Orthodox Jewish, a percentage that is currently increasing. While the majority of Israeli Jews are Orthodox, a significant portion of the population is also secular or Reform. In Jerusalem, the Orthodox population is estimated to be around 40-50% of the city's residents. The Orthodox community in Israel is diverse, with various sub-groups and practices. It is important to note that the Orthodox community is not monolithic and has a wide range of beliefs and customs. The Orthodox community in Israel is also facing challenges, such as the lack of recognition of their religious rights and the impact of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Despite these challenges, the Orthodox community remains a significant and growing part of Israeli society. It was created
